How hiring works?

There are six steps to hiring an apprentice

Choose an apprenticeship standard

A standard is a list of the skills and knowledge that apprentices will have once they’ve completed their apprenticeships

Every job role has a different standard.

Apply for funding

You may be entitled to funding for your apprenticeship.

The amount depends on the apprentice’s age and the size of your business, among other things.

Find a training provider

Training providers are colleges or other organisations that carry out an apprentice’s training

Sometimes they’ll come to you to train your apprentice. At other times your apprentice will travel to them.

Recruit your apprentice

Apprentices can be someone you already know, or someone new.

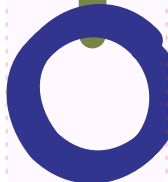

Depending on factors like which standard you choose and where you’re based, your apprentice could join you within a few weeks.

Start the apprenticeship

As an employer you’ll have to agree to some simple terms and conditions

They include asking your apprentice to sign an agreement, and meeting national minimum wage laws.

Complete the apprenticeship

Apprentices must be assessed at the end of their apprenticeship.

You can look for assessment organisations yourself or let your training provider do it for you.

Your responsibilities as an employer

When you hire apprentices, you’re agreeing to provide:

- meaningful work
- a salary
- time to train
- a contract
- an apprenticeship agreement

Pay and conditions

You must pay your apprentice at least £2.73 an hour.

If they’re 19 or older and have completed their first year, they’re entitled to national minimum wage.

Training

Apprentices need paid time off for training.

This may be one day a week, or blocks of several days at once.

Hours

Most apprentices spend at least 30 hours a week with their employers.

They should be able to complete their apprenticeship inside their contracted hours.

What to expect from training provider

Your training provider can make it easier for you to employ an apprentice.

Lead providers

If you're using several providers, you'll choose one of them to become the lead.

Lead providers carry out important jobs like managing payments.

Recruitment

Training providers often handle all or part of the recruitment process.

They can:

- advertise vacancies, by writing adverts or sending templates
- shortlist candidates for interviews
- contact candidates after interviews
- register apprentices

Some providers charge for these services.

Assessment

Your training provider will work with you to choose an assessment organisation.

Payments and funding

All apprenticeship funding is routed through your lead provider.

Your lead provider will:

- tell you whether you're eligible for incentive payments
- pass incentive payments to you
- send information about your apprenticeship to us
- pay training providers on your behalf

How to choose a standard

Standards show the skills apprentices will learn during their apprenticeships.

To see what’s available read the list of apprenticeship standards.

How standards are delivered

Providers may visit you to carry out training, or ask your apprentice to go to them.

You don’t have to choose a local training provider or one you’ve used before.

What can you deliver yourself?

You can carry out training in-house, but it could affect your funding.

You can also assess your apprentice yourself, but you must:

- do it impartially
- involve a third party
- provide supporting evidence like employee records
